The Contracting Authority carries out random checks on a wide variety of products, ranging from electrical appliances, gas appliances, fireworks, to toys and other products intended for consumers. Random checks of the different product categories will help to ensure: · that they meet technical standards. · the labelling/rating is in order. · that they are not dangerous to use. Checks are typically conducted by the Contracting Authority selecting products where experience shows that there may be a particular risk associated with them. Other times, the focus is on an entire product group, for example, lighting, cots, garden chairs or toddlers' toys. Checks are also carried out as a theme. A theme can be to check the labelling/rating of products, for instance, CE marking, warning labels or whether the accompanying user manual for the product is correct. The Contracting Authority also carries out checks on products on the basis of reviews and enquiries from consumers and the business community. The requirements for the quality, performance and scope of the laboratory services are described in more detail in the Annexes mentioned in the tender document, section. 3.1.
