Laying bottom pipelines will be an activity that takes place early before other technical contractors have begun their installation works. The sewage pipelines from drains, drain pipes and internal sanitation and HVAC equipment will be led to prefabricated pump stations supplied and installed by the process contractor.

The heating system must, among other things, collect hydronic heating from the existing heat plant in the sludge building. The construction contractor will lay the local heating pipes between the new treatment plant and the sludge building. The piping contractor runs the pipes out of the respective building and finishes with a flange that the construction contractor can continue laying from. The piping contractor must also lay pipes to collect energy from heat exchangers in connection with blower machines.
