II.1.4. Short description

The Department for Language and Communication at The University of Southern Denmark is having a research project on The Ecology of Psychotherapy (hereinafter EPICLE project). The EPICLE project focuses at the conversation between patient and therapist in a psychotherapeutic treatment, which is more than words exchanged between two people. The meeting is also an interplay of physical mechanisms, emotions and cognition. All these factors influence whether a treatment is going well or bad. The EPICLE project wishes to find how much chemistry between a patient and a therapist in a psychotherapeutic treatment means for a successful treatment, and which linguistic, emotional and physical mechanisms, that creates the good chemistry between the patient and the therapist.

The research team intends to acquire an integrated monitoring system that allows for data collection and analysis. The research project requires two such Data Collection and analysis systems.
