The construction of a new quay for the Port of Tyne at South Shields. The development will consist of a new 125 m x 56 m wide downriver extension to Riverside Quay across the Tyne Dock Basin which is located at the entrance to the former Tyne Dock. The extension will operate as a berth for Kamsarmax and Panamax bulk carriers and will support the operation of continuous ship unloaders, mobile harbour cranes and general port traffic. The works also include the construction of a new mooring dolphin, the rebuild of the front face of the adjacent Riverside Quay over a length of 118 m complete with new crane rail, fenders, ladders and bollards, as well as the construction of a new rear crane rail within the existing suspended deck and the reconstruction of a 92 m length of the quay wall within the McNulty Yard located to the East of the Basin. The works also include a capital dredge to create a new berth pocket 260 m long by 50 m wide to a depth of 13 m CD although the quay works will all be designed to allow for a future dredge depth of 14 m CD. The dredge also includes widening the approach channel to the quay to 10 m CD over an area of 10,200 m².
