II.2.4. Description of the procurement

Enova would like to enter into a framework agreement with one tenderer who will assist with planning, implementing, and analysing various types of qualitative and quantitative surveys. The objective of the surveys is to acquire a decision basis for the strategy and planning work as well as measuring the effect of the market and communication work in Enova.

Enova carries out various market and interested party surveys each year. These include regular surveys and ad-hoc surveys for identifying specific needs.

Both quantitative and qualitative surveys and a combination of these will be relevant. Relevant methods for the qualitative surveys are typically interviews, dyads, and focus groups. Relevant methods for the quantitative surveys will typically be electronic questionnaires, but can be telephone interviews in exceptional cases. There can also be automated dispatches to defined respondents, or the recruitment and use of different user panels.

The contracting authority needs assistance for planning, designing and quality assuring the surveys (survey design) as well as implementing and analysing.
