II.2.4. Description of the procurement

The study should assess the need to introduce consolidated tape for various financial instruments from the perspective of different users. It should examine the need for either a pre- and post trade or a post trade consolidated tape. The study should assess how the different types of market participants would make use of the consolidated tape (e.g. best execution, trade cost analysis).

The study should also analyse the existing consolidated tape frameworks. In this regard, it should provide not only a general description of the US and Canadian consolidated tape frameworks, but also an in-depth analysis of the functioning of those frameworks. The study should present possible scenarios for the architecture of a successful consolidated tape framework in the EU. The study should assess in those scenarios the merits of promoting competition between several consolidated tape providers, having regard to the efficiency and costs implications.
