avere proprietà emostatiche grazie alla sua capacità di trattenere una grande quantità di acqua rispetto al suo volume. L'azione anti-emorragica si ottiene attraverso la rapida disidratazione e successiva concentrazione del sangue a contatto con la polvere. La concentrazione di proteine del siero e cellule produce un gel viscoso. La normale attivazione piastrinica e deposizione di fibrina nel sangue rappreso produce un coagulo che limita ulteriore sanguinamento. Si deve dissolve naturalmente in 7-14 giorni o può essere facilmente rimosso con una delicata irrigazione e aspirazione
