II.2.4. Description of the procurement

The project follows the employer survey that was awarded to NIFU after a public announcement, and which is documented in the report Støren with others (2019), Education for Working Life. Employers' expectations for and experiences of newly qualified persons from universities, university colleges, and vocational colleges, NIFU report 2019:3. The contracting authority is open to the fact that other relevant problems can have arisen in recent years, which will also be important to include in the survey. Tenderers are encouraged to justify good topics they would like to examine.

Tenders must draft a plan for how various sectors and occupational groups can be incorporated into the survey and which topics/questions will be covered, as well as the scope and method. The survey must cover occupational groups in both the public and private sector, and it must have a format that makes it possible to uncover any differences between industries, type of employer and region. We would like the survey to contribute to identifying interesting trends. Thus a comparative design based on the previous survey is therefore an advantage.

The survey must have sufficient scope so that it can be broken down to graduating higher education institution level and different professional areas, as well as types of graduates candidates (level and profession).
