II.1.4. Short description

The IDA was established in 1999 as a network of global and, since 2007, regional organizations of persons with disabilities (OPDs) and their families. It was formed by 14 organizations that came together as a group to lobby for Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

Although persons with disabilities constitute 15% of the world's population, climate action, including at the multilateral level, has neglected to fully reflect their rights. While the preamble to the 2015 Paris Agreement includes persons with disabilities as one of the groups most acutely affected by climate change, they have been largely excluded from decision-making processes and outcomes under the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), as well as from States' climate change policies and plans at the domestic level. Now, IDA is planning to prepare and adopt a comprehensive strategy to ensure that the rights and concerns of persons with disabilities are included in climate action policies and processes.
