Beschrijving: The contracting authority has concluded that the exemption regulation can be used for school camps and that is "clear" that the climate and environmental requirements in the requirement specifications will have a better climate and environmental effect than an evaluation with 30% weighting. The contracting authority has therefore chosen to replace the award criteria with a minimum requirement for Euro 6 standard in combination with a best-effort commitment for actual use of zero emissions where practically possible. The following is a statement of the selection: Parent The contracting authority has a clear need to reduce the climate footprint from bus transport, also at school camps. For this type of service procurement, environment is a central part of the objective of the procurement. At the same time, the market dialogue shows that school camp transport has distinctive practical and technical limitations that differ considerably from regular daily driving. Main findings from the market dialogue. The market dialogue shows that an absolute zero emission requirement for school camp driving is not feasible. This is due to several technical and practical conditions: Baggage capacity and weight: Electric buses have a significantly higher self-weight than diesel buses due to battery packs. Baggage is at risk of having to leave luggage due to weight problems. Range and charging infrastructure: School camp driving often involves longer distances than regular daily driving. The buses currently on the market can drive 500-600 km without charging in summer, but the range is affected by weather conditions, topography and load. Access to charging infrastructure at destination locations is uncertain. Market access: There are few relevant suppliers who have electric buses with sufficient capacity ready at the start of the contract. Why Euro 6 as a minimum requirement is more appropriate than zero emission requirement or award criteria With a minimum requirement of zero emissions for school camps, most qualified providers would be excluded from the competition. Such a requirement cannot be consistent, given that the baggage need, passenger numbers and range vary between assignment and are not known at the time of the tender or contract. A zero emission requirement would therefore be contrary to the proportionality principle and the principle of competition in the Procurement Act § 4, and would not be "suitable" in relation to the nature of the delivery. It is very difficult for both tenderers and the Contracting Authority to evaluate in advance what proportion of zero emissions can actually be committed to deliver, given the variability of the school camp assignments. An award criteria based on the estimated share of zero emission driving would complicate both the evaluation and later follow-up, as tenderers cannot guarantee a fixed percentage given the variability of the assignments. By setting Euro 6 as the absolute minimum requirement, all tenders are ensured that they fulfil a high environmental standard that can be met in a consistent manner. At the same time, a contractual obligation ensures the actual use of zero emissions "where practically possible" that tenderers commit to maximising the share of zero emissions within the practical frameworks. This is a more accurate tool than a relative point scale that does not take into account the practical limitations. A minimum requirement of Euro 6 combined with best-effort gives, therefore, more verifiable and enforceable environmental obligations in the contract period. The market dialogue shows that most suppliers can deliver Euro 6 standards and that some can also deliver zero emissions for some camp school trips. By choosing a minimum requirement for Euro 6, high environmental ambitions can therefore be combined with real competition and feasibility for the supplier market. Summarised Evaluation with 30% weighting on the estimated share of zero emission driving risks a winner of tenders with optimistic estimates, but that the actual environmental performance will be lower than expected due to practical limitations. An absolute zero emission requirement would exclude qualified tenderers and be contrary to the proportionality principle. It is therefore clear that a minimum requirement of Euro 6 standard combined with a best-commitment commitment to the actual use of zero emissions gives a better climate and environmental effect than evaluation with 30 % weighting.
